IN BRIEF

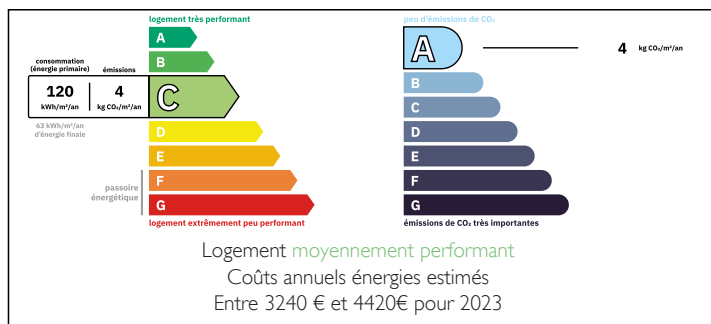

In a winegrowing village down a quiet impasse is this impressive house. Pass through the wrought iron gates into the courtyard and you find yourself in a calm place, a private haven.

A house built on cellars in the Burgundy style with a large wraparound terrace from south to west which affords plenty of space for outdoor living with open views towards the classified Grand site de France the two rocks of Solutré and Vergisson.

This house has plenty of space for all the family to pursue their individual activities. It could also house a professional business and still leave room for privacy. Not far from Macon yet, countryside. It could also be run as a gite. A light and airy home with 6 large double bedrooms, several living spaces, a converted loft affords...
