DESCRIPTION

Originally a flour mill, this exceptional property was in the same family for numerous generations. Mid 20th Century, the mill was converted to a hydro-turbine and has been generating its own electricity ever since. It now also makes its own under floor heating.

On the ground floor, the original mill house, has a kitchen, a lounge or bedroom, an office room, and under the mill side of the house, a shower room and WC.

Upstairs is the newer kitchen which makes the most of the original mill features and has a laundry area to the rear, A lounge also has some of the flour mill workings as an unusual feature, and there are three bedrooms, one of an exceptional size, and a modern bathroom.

Above the lounge, a separate room has been fitted out again using some of the mill features and to the other side of the property, a large attic space currently used as a library and for storage.

Outside are various outbuildings, barns and storage areas and the turbine room.

The mill has 100% total water rights. The mill water is a spur off the main stream via a weir which runs totally over the land of the mill and rejoins the main stream at the bottom of the mill land around 100m from the turbine.
