Living in the Pyrénées-Orientales offers a wonderful combination of Mediterranean lifestyle, mountain scenery and a strong Catalan character. With a famously sunny climate, the department is perfect for outdoor living, whether walking in the Albères, cycling through vineyards, enjoying the beaches of the Côte Vermeille or heading into the Pyrenees for a day in the mountains.

At the heart of the department is Perpignan, a vibrant historic city where French and Catalan influences meet. Its colourful old centre offers cafés, restaurants, markets and independent shops alongside impressive architecture, including the Palace of the Kings of Majorca and the iconic Castillet. The city provides excellent everyday shopping, cultural events and services, as well as useful rail and air connections.

Beyond Perpignan, the region is dotted with lively market towns and characterful villages, surrounded by vineyards, orchards and dramatic scenery. Local food and wine play an important part in everyday life, while the Mediterranean beaches are never far away.

Another great advantage is the proximity to Spain. The border is easily reached, making Figueres, Girona, the Costa Brava and even Barcelona realistic destinations for a day out or weekend away.

For anyone considering a permanent move, holiday home or simply a different pace of life, the Pyrénées-Orientales offers an unusually appealing mix of coast, countryside, mountains and city life —
